Which type of roof covering is most effective in preventing the spread of fires from flying brands?

- A. Class D
- B. Class B
- C. Class A
- D. Class C

Answer: C

Explanation:

Class A roof coverings are the most effective in preventing the spread of fires from flying brands. Flying brands are burning embers or pieces of combustible material that are carried by the wind and can ignite other combustible materials or structures. Class A roof coverings are tested to withstand severe fire exposure from simulated fire sources, such as large burning brands, and do not produce flying brands themselves. Class A roof coverings include materials such as asphalt shingles, metal sheets, clay or concrete tiles, slate, and some types of synthetic membranes<sup>12</sup>. Reference:

NEW QUESTION # 94

Fire pump overload point is defined as:

- A. 100 percent rated flow capacity at 65 percent rate total head.
- B. 150 percent rated flow capacity at 100 percent rate total head.
- C. 150 percent rated flow capacity at 65 percent rate total head.
- D. 100 percent rated flow capacity at 100 percent rate total head.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Fire pumps are required to produce specific flow rates (GPM) and pressures of 40 PSI or greater.

Further, the above-mentioned agencies advise that the pumps should produce at least 65% of that pressure at 150% of the rated flow -- and all the while operating at a 15 foot lift condition. The performance curves must be such that the shut-off head, or "churn," is from 101% to 140% of the rated head, depending upon the agency's definition of the term.

NEW QUESTION # 95

What type of property classifications experience the majority of fire deaths in the United States?

- A. Educational
- B. Business
- C. Public Assembly
- D. One- and two-family dwellings

Answer: D

Explanation:

The type of property classifications that experience the majority of fire deaths in the United States are one- and two-family dwellings. According to the NFPA, one- and two-family dwellings accounted for 64 percent of all civilian fire deaths in 2021, followed by apartments with 11 percent, and other residential properties with 1 percent<sup>1</sup>. One- and two-family dwellings are more vulnerable to fire fatalities because they often lack adequate fire protection systems, such as smoke alarms and sprinklers, and have more potential sources of ignition, such as cooking, heating, and smoking<sup>2</sup>. Additionally, one- and two-family dwellings may have less escape routes, longer response times, and more occupants, especially children and elderly, who are at higher risk of fire death. Reference:
