NEW QUESTION # 40

When performing a vulnerability assessment from outside the perimeter, which of the following network devices is MOST likely to skew the scan results?

- A. Router
- B. Firewall
- C. IDS
- D. Switch
- E. Access Point

Answer: B

Explanation:

A firewall is most likely to skew the results of a vulnerability scan when performing an assessment from outside the perimeter. Firewalls are designed to filter and block traffic based on security rules, which can prevent scanners from accurately assessing vulnerabilities in the network. Firewalls may block or alter certain types of scan traffic, leading to incomplete or misleading results.

NEW QUESTION # 41

What is the definition of a security breach?

- A. Unauthorized access that violates the authentication, authorization, and accounting of an information asset through intentional access, destruction, or manipulation of an information asset.
- B. An event or series of correlated events that indicate a potential violation of some control or policy.
- C. Unauthorized access that violates the confidentiality, integrity, or availability of an information asset in the form of unintentional access, destruction, or manipulation of an information asset.
- D. An event or series of uncorrelated events that indicate a potential violation of some control or policy has occurred.

Answer: A

Explanation:

A security breach refers to unauthorized access that compromises the security of an information asset, violating controls such as authentication, authorization, or accounting. This breach often involves intentional actions like accessing, destroying, or manipulating the asset without proper authorization.

NEW QUESTION # 42

- A. Discretionary Access Control
- B. Privileged Access Management
- C. Least Privilege
- D. Separation of Duties

Answer: C

Explanation:

The principle of Least Privilege ensures that users are granted the minimum level of access required to perform their tasks. In this case, using the general user account instead of a domain admin account demonstrates least privilege, as the administrator is only granted the necessary permissions to access the required records, rather than full administrative rights.
