Questions (Q633-Q638):

NEW QUESTION # 633

Which of the following factors is a PRIMARY reason to drive changes in an Information Security Continuous Monitoring (ISCM) strategy?

- A. Changes to core missions or business processes
- B. Changes in Service Organization Control (SOC) 2 reporting requirements
- C. Testing and Evaluation (TE) personnel changes
- D. Increased Cross-Site Request Forgery (CSRF) attacks

Answer: A

Explanation:

The factor that is a primary reason to drive changes in an Information Security Continuous Monitoring (ISCM) strategy is changes to core missions or business processes. ISCM is a process that provides ongoing and real-time observation, assessment, and reporting of the security posture and performance of an organization, system, or network, against a set of predefined criteria, standards, or regulations. ISCM can help to provide timely and accurate information and feedback on the security status and risks of the organization, system, or network, as well as to support the security decision making and actions of the organization and the stakeholders. ISCM should follow a well-defined strategy that specifies the scope, objectives, methodology, tools, techniques, roles, and responsibilities for the ISCM process, as well as the frequency, format, and distribution of the ISCM reports. The ISCM strategy should be aligned with the security goals and strategies of the organization, system, or network, and it should be reviewed and updated regularly to ensure its relevance and effectiveness. The factor that is a primary reason to drive changes in the ISCM strategy is changes to core missions or business processes. The core missions or business processes are the essential and fundamental activities or functions that the organization, system, or network performs or supports to achieve its vision, mission, values, and strategies. The core missions or business processes can affect the ISCM strategy, as they can determine the scope, direction, and priority of the ISCM process, as well as the security risks and opportunities that the organization, system, or network faces. Changes to core missions or business processes can have a significant impact on the ISCM strategy, as they can create a gap or a misalignment between the ISCM strategy and the core missions or business processes, and expose the organization, system, or network to new or increased security threats or vulnerabilities. Therefore, changes to core missions or business processes would require a review and possible change to the ISCM strategy, to ensure that the ISCM strategy is consistent and compatible with the core missions or business processes, and that the ISCM strategy supports and enables the organization, system, or network to achieve its core missions or business processes. Testing and Evaluation (TE) personnel changes, increased Cross-Site Request Forgery (CSRF) attacks, or changes in Service Organization Control (SOC) 2 reporting requirements are not the factors that are primary reasons to drive changes in the ISCM strategy, as they are more related to the operational, technical, or compliance aspects of the ISCM process, rather than the strategic or business aspects of the ISCM process.

NEW QUESTION # 634

Which of the following can be defined as THE unique attribute used as a unique identifier within a given table to identify a tuple?

- A. foreign key
- B. candidate key
- C. primary key
- D. secondary key

Answer: C

Explanation:

The following answers were NOT correct:

Candidate Key: A candidate key is a combination of attributes that can be uniquely used to identify a database record without any extraneous data. Each table may have one or more candidate keys. One of these candidate keys is selected as the table primary key.

Foreign Key: A foreign key is a field in a relational table that matches the primary key column of another table. The foreign key can be used to cross-reference tables.

Secondary key: The term secondary key is a key that is used strictly for data-retrieval purposes. A secondary key is sometimes defined as a "data item value that identifies a set of records." It is important to note that a secondary key does not need to have unique values in a table; in this respect, secondary keys differ from primary keys (and candidate keys and superkeys).

Feedback from Jerry: A candidate key is one of several alternative columns in a table that may be chosen as a primary key. The PRIMARY KEY IS the unique identifier. The foundation of a relational database is the establishment and reliance on a unique primary key, not candidate keys. Primary key is a more correct answer to this question than candidate key.
