- D. FIM
- E. EDR

Answer: B

Explanation:

DLP (Data Loss Prevention) is a service that prevents the unauthorized or accidental disclosure of confidential or sensitive data, such as company information, intellectual property, customer data, or personal information.

DLP can monitor, detect, and block the data in motion (such as email, web, or network traffic), data at rest (such as files, databases, or cloud storage), or data in use (such as endpoints, applications, or clipboard). DLP can help a systems administrator to ensure confidential company information is not leaked to competitors by applying policies and rules that define what data is considered confidential, who can access it, how it can be used, and what actions to take if a violation occurs. For example, DLP can encrypt, quarantine, delete, or alert the administrator if confidential data is being copied, transferred, or shared outside the organization.

- B. Replace the instance with another from the baseline.
- C. Perform a memory acquisition in the affected instance.
- D. Isolate the instance from the network into quarantine.

Explanation

The first step in incident response is to contain the incident activities and attackers, which means preventing them from spreading to other systems or causing more damage. In this case, the security analyst should isolate the instance from the network into quarantine, which means cutting off its communication with other hosts and services. This will stop the cryptocurrency mining activity and prevent the attacker from accessing the instance remotely. Isolating the instance also preserves the evidence for further analysis and investigation.
