NEW QUESTION # 126

What does the symcfg discover command do when upgrading Solutions Enabler on a Linux host?

- A. Identifies the running SE version
- B. Builds the SYMAPI database
- C. Creates backups of the configuration directories
- D. Verifies that the SE daemons have been stopped

Answer: A

Explanation:

Step by Step Comprehensive Detailed Explanation:

When upgrading Solutions Enabler (SE) on a Linux host, the symcfg discover command plays a crucial role in preparing for the upgrade. Its primary function in this context is to:

* Identify the running SE version: Before proceeding with the upgrade, it's essential to know the current version of Solutions Enabler installed on the host. The symcfg discover command gathers information about the existing SE environment, including the version number. This information is used to determine the appropriate upgrade path and ensure compatibility.

Why other options are incorrect:

* B. Verifies that the SE daemons have been stopped: While stopping SE daemons is a necessary step before the upgrade, it's not the function of the symcfg discover command.

* C. Builds the SYMAPI database: The SYMAPI database is typically built during the initial installation or after a fresh discovery.

* D. Creates backups of the configuration directories: Backups are important, but they are usually handled separately as part of the upgrade process, not by the symcfg discover command itself.
