EMC Dell Technologies PowerMax Operate Sample Questions (Q117-Q122):

NEW QUESTION # 117

What is the Deduplication Management Object (DMO) used for with PowerMax Deduplication?

- A. Inline process using the same data reduction module as the Adaptive Compression Engine
- B. Stores and manages pointers between front-end devices and a single instance of data stored on disk
- C. Identifies identical data patterns based on the Hash ID
- D. Representation of data in a deduplication relationship

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 118

A systems administrator has decommissioned a host with two devices allocated to it. What must the administrator do prior to deleting the devices?

- A. Remove the Storage Group
- B. Remove the device attribute
- C. Delete the Initiators
- D. Unmap from the front-end ports

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 119

What are the default settings for a Storage Group in PowerMax, VMAX All Flash, and VMAX3?

- A. Default SRP and no SL
- B. Default SRP and Optimized SL
- C. No SRP and Optimized SL
- D. No SRP and no SL

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 120

A production PowerMax array has been configured to replicate to a disaster recovery (DR) array using SRDF Adaptive Copy mode. There are occasional bandwidth constraints on the network connecting the two arrays.

These bandwidth constraints prevent the immediate replication of production data.

Where does the new production data accumulate until it can be replicated to the array at the DR site?

- A. Local journal volumes
- B. R2 device
- C. R1 device
- D. Local array cache

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 121

Two PowerMax arrays have been configured for replication using SRDF. During a disaster recovery operation production has been transferred to the R2 devices at the target site. Which operation allows the primary hosts to access the R1 devices without waiting for a data transfer to complete from the R2 devices'?

- A. Fallback
- B. Resume
- C. Update
- D. Failover

Answer: B

Explanation:

Step by Step Comprehensive Detailed Explanation:

In an SRDF (Symmetrix Remote Data Facility) disaster recovery scenario where production has been switched to the R2 devices at the target site, the Resume operation allows the primary hosts to regain access to the R1 devices without waiting for a full data transfer from the R2 devices.

Here's how it works:

* R1 Access: The Resume operation makes the R1 devices (at the primary site) accessible to the primary hosts.

* Background Synchronization: While the hosts access and modify data on the R1 devices, SRDF continues to synchronize the changes from the R2 devices (at the target site) in the background. This ensures that the R1 devices are gradually updated with any changes that occurred on the R2 devices during the failover.

This approach minimizes downtime and allows for a quicker return to the primary site without waiting for a lengthy synchronization process to complete before granting host access.

Why other options are incorrect:

* A. Update: This operation copies changes from R2 to R1, but it doesn't necessarily grant immediate host access to R1.

* B. Fallback: This is a more comprehensive process that involves reversing replication direction and fully restoring the primary site as the production environment.

* C. Failover: This operation switches production to the R2 devices, not the R1 devices.
