An organization is sizing an Anypoint Virtual Private Cloud (VPC) to extend its internal network to CloudHub 1.0. For this sizing calculation, the organization assumes three production-type environments will each support up to 150 Mule application deployments. Each Mule application deployment is expected to be configured with two CloudHub 1.0 workers and will use the zero-downtime feature in CloudHub 1.0. This is expected to result in, at most, several Mule application deployments per hour.

What is the minimum number of IP addresses that should be configured for this VPC resulting in the smallest usable range of private IP addresses to support the deployment and zero-downtime of these 150 Mule applications (not accounting for any future Mule applications)?

- A. 10.0.0.0/21 (2048 IPs)
- B. 10.0.0.0/23 (512 IPs)

An external web UI application currently accepts occasional HTTP requests from client web browsers to change (insert, update, or delete) inventory pricing information in an inventory system's database. New customer experience systems are expected to be added in the future. The database is used heavily and limits the number of SELECT queries that can be made to the database to 10 requests per hour per user.

How can inventory pricing changes synchronize with the various customer experience systems in near real-time using an integration mechanism that is scalable, decoupled, reusable, and maintainable?

- A. Write a Mule application with a Database On Table Row event source configured for the inventory pricing database, with the watermark attribute set to an appropriate database column.
- B. Add a trigger to the inventory-pricing database table so that for each change to the inventory pricing database, a stored procedure is called that makes a REST call to a Mule application.
- C. Write a Mule application with a Database On Table Row event source configured for the inventory pricing database, with the ID attribute set to an appropriate database column.
