NEW QUESTION # 575

A security analyst identified a vulnerable and deprecated runtime engine that is supporting a public-facing banking application. The developers anticipate the transition to modern development environments will take at least a month. Which of the following controls would best mitigate the risk without interrupting the service during the transition?

- A. Uninstalling the impacted runtime engine
- B. Selectively blocking traffic on the affected port
- C. Shutting down the systems until the code is ready
- D. Configuring IPS and WAF with signatures

Answer: D

Explanation:

Given the vulnerability in the deprecated runtime engine, configuring an IPS (Intrusion Prevention System) and WAF (Web Application Firewall) with appropriate signatures is the best temporary control. This allows the organization to monitor and block potential attacks targeting known vulnerabilities in the runtime engine while the developers work on the transition. Shutting down the systems or uninstalling the runtime engine would cause service interruptions, and blocking traffic might disrupt legitimate users. IPS and WAF provide an active layer of defense without interrupting service. CASP+ emphasizes the use of layered security, including IPS and WAF, to mitigate risks in public-facing applications.
