ISC Certified in Cybersecurity (CC) Sample Questions (Q165-Q170):

NEW QUESTION # 165

Which security control mostly used to prevent data breach

- A. Physical control
- B. RBAC

- C. Logical Control
- D. Administrative Control

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 166

Which of the following attacks can TLS help mitigate?

- A. Man-in-the-middle (MITM) attacks
- B. Cross-site Scripting (XSS) attacks
- C. Social engineering attacks
- D. SQL injection attacks

Answer: A

Explanation:

Transport Layer Security (TLS) helps mitigate man-in-the-middle (MITM) attacks by providing encryption, authentication, and integrity protection for data transmitted between communicating systems. TLS ensures that data exchanged between a client and server cannot be intercepted, modified, or read by unauthorized third parties.

TLS uses digital certificates and public key cryptography to authenticate servers (and sometimes clients), preventing attackers from impersonating legitimate endpoints. It also encrypts session data using symmetric encryption, protecting confidentiality even if traffic is captured.

TLS does not prevent application-layer attacks such as XSS or SQL injection, which are caused by insecure application logic. It also does not address social engineering, which targets human behavior rather than network protocols.

Because MITM attacks exploit unencrypted or improperly authenticated connections, TLS is a primary defense recommended by NIST and all modern security standards for protecting data in transit.

NEW QUESTION # 167

A company network experiences a sudden flood of network packets that causes a major slowdown in internet traffic. What type of event is this?

- A. Adverse event
- B. Security incident
- C. Exploit
- D. Natural disaster

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 168

Which of these is the WEAKEST form of authentication we can implement?

- A. Something you know
- B. Biometric authentication
- C. Something you have
- D. Something you are

Answer: A

Explanation:

"Something you know" authentication refers to knowledge-based credentials such as passwords, PINs, or passphrases. This is widely regarded as the weakest form of authentication because it is highly susceptible to compromise through phishing, brute-force attacks, credential stuffing, shoulder surfing, and social engineering.

Passwords can be guessed, reused, written down, or stolen through malware and data breaches. Users often choose weak or reused passwords, further reducing security. Even when password complexity rules are enforced, attackers frequently bypass them using previously leaked credentials.

In contrast, "something you have" (tokens, smart cards), "something you are" (biometrics), and biometric authentication provide stronger assurance because they are harder to steal or replicate. Modern security standards recommend combining factors using multi-factor authentication (MFA) to reduce reliance on knowledge-based authentication alone.

NIST SP 800-63 explicitly discourages password-only authentication for sensitive systems, emphasizing that "something you know" should be augmented with additional factors whenever possible.

NEW QUESTION # 169

An employee launched a privilege escalation attack to gain root access on one of the organization's database servers. The employee has an authorized user account on the server. What log file would MOST likely contain relevant information?

- A. Firewall log
- B. Database application log
- C. Operating system log
- D. IDS log

Answer: C

Explanation:

Operating system logs are the most relevant source of information for detecting and investigating privilege escalation attacks. These logs record authentication events, privilege changes, process executions, and system-level actions.

Because the attacker already had authorized access, firewall and IDS logs may show little or no suspicious activity. Database logs focus on database-level operations, not OS privilege changes.

OS logs provide the best visibility into actions such as sudo usage, kernel exploits, and unauthorized permission changes. They are essential for forensic analysis and incident response involving insider threats.
