Snowflake SnowPro Advanced: Data Analyst Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q80-Q85):

NEW QUESTION # 80
Data clustering is an example of which type of data analysis technique?

- A. Predictive analysis
- B. Prescriptive analysis
- C. Exploratory analysis
- D. Descriptive analysis

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 81
When optimizing query performance in Snowflake, what benefits does result caching provide?

- A. Improves schema changes management
- B. Limits data access for specific user roles
- C. Speeds up query execution by storing intermediate results
- D. Restricts query optimization

Answer: C

Explanation:
Result caching accelerates query execution by storing intermediate results, reducing processing time for repetitive or commonly accessed queries.

NEW QUESTION # 82
A retail company uses Snowflake to store sales data'. They want to build a dashboard in Tableau to analyze regional sales performance. The sales data is stored in a table called 'SALES DATA' with columns 'REGION', 'PRODUCT CATEGORY, 'SALE AMOUNT, and 'SALE DATE. They want to optimize the Tableau dashboard's performance when querying Snowflake. Which of the following Snowflake features, when correctly implemented, will MOST effectively improve the query speed of the dashboard?

- A. Implementing Snowflake's Data Marketplace to source external sales data, which Tableau can then directly connect to without needing to access the company's 'SALES DATA'.
- B. Creating a standard Snowflake view directly querying 'SALES DATA' and connecting Tableau to that view.
- C. Creating a materialized view on top of 'SALES_DATA' , pre-aggregating sales data by REGION' and 'PRODUCT_CATEGORY , and connecting Tableau to the materialized view.
- D. Using a stored procedure in Snowflake to calculate and store aggregated sales data in a separate table, and connecting Tableau to this aggregated table.
- E. Using Tableau's data extract feature to import all 'SALES DATA into a Tableau Hyper file and connecting the dashboard to the extract.

Answer: C

Explanation:
Materialized views in Snowflake are designed to pre-compute and store the results of a query, significantly reducing the query execution time when the same query is run again. By pre-aggregating the sales data, the Tableau dashboard can retrieve the required aggregated data much faster than querying the entire table each time. Option A will still query the base table. Option C bypasses Snowflake entirely, which may not be desired. Option D is irrelevant to the problem stated. Option E involves a more complex setup and maintenance compared to materialized views, making it less optimal.

NEW QUESTION # 83
In Snowflake, how do window functions differ from table functions?

- A. Table functions return tables as results.
- B. Table functions operate on windowed rows.
- C. Window functions work on entire tables.
- D. Window functions modify table structures.

Answer: B

Explanation:
Table functions operate on windowed rows, distinguishing them from window functions in Snowflake.

NEW QUESTION # 84

You have a table named 'ORDERS with a 'ORDER DATE column stored as VARCHAR. The column contains dates in the format 'YYYY-MM-DD HH24:Ml:SS.FF3'. You need to calculate the number of orders placed in January 2023. Which of the following SQL statements will achieve this most efficiently and accurately, considering potential time zone differences configured at the user or account level?

- A. □
- B. □
- C. □
- D. □
- E. □

Answer: D

Explanation:
Option E is the most robust because it explicitly handles the VARCHAR to TIMESTAMP conversion, incorporates timezone conversion from UTC to the session's timezone, and then extracts the DATE part for accurate filtering. This accounts for potential timezone discrepancies that might affect date boundaries. Options A and B rely on string manipulation, which is prone to errors and not recommended for date operations. Option C lacks time zone considerations, which can lead to issues. Option D is less efficient because MONTH() and YEAR() function needs to be applied, and it also lacks timezone conversion consideration.
