NEW QUESTION # 112
Your team is working on building a machine learning model. There are a bunch of terminologies that are being used. What is an "instance" or an "example"?

- A. One row of a dataset containing one or more input columns and possibly a prediction result.
- B. An answer for a prediction task, either the answer produced by a machine learning system or the right answer supplied in training data. E.g. image contains a "cat".
- C. An input variable is used in making predictions. E.g. number of rooms in a house price prediction model.
- D. The "knobs" that you tweak during successive runs of training a model. E.g. learning rate

Answer: A

Explanation:
One row of a dataset containing one or more input columns and possibly a prediction result.

- Instance: The thing about which you want to make a prediction. For example, the instance might be a web page that you want to classify as either "about cats" or "not about cats".

- Label: An answer for a prediction task either the answer produced by a machine learning system, or the right answer supplied in training data. For example, the label for a web page might be "about cats".

- Feature: A property of an instance used in a prediction task. For example, a web page might have a feature "contains the word 'cat'".

- Feature Column: A set of related features, such as the set of all possible countries in which users might live. An example may have one or more features present in a feature column. "Feature column" is Google-specific terminology. A feature column is referred to as a "namespace" in the VW system (at Yahoo/Microsoft), or a field.

- Example: An instance (with its features) and a label.

- Model: A statistical representation of a prediction task. You train a model on examples then use the model to make predictions
