- A. Measure, Process, Service, Capability
- B. Name, Statement, Rationale, Implications
- C. Roles, Processes, Information, Resources
- D. Vision, Rating, Risks, Actions

Answer: C

Explanation:
Business capabilities in TOGAF are defined as the ability of an organization to achieve a specific purpose or outcome. The components that make up a business capability typically include:
* Roles: The responsibilities and positions within the organization that support the capability.
* Processes: The activities and workflows that are essential to the functioning of the capability.
* Information: The data and knowledge necessary for the capability to operate effectively.

(Note in this example the cells colored green, yellow, and red, are also marked G. Y, and R, respectively) Which of the following best describes this technique?

- A. Perspective Analysis
- B. Gap Analysis
- C. Relationship Mapping
- D. Capability Mapping

Answer: C

Explanation:
The technique shown in the example is called relationship mapping. It is a technique that can be used to show how a business architecture addresses stakeholder concerns across different parts of an organization2. It can highlight gaps or overlaps in the coverage of stakeholder concerns by a business architecture. In this case, the technique is used to relate business capabilities to organization units so as to highlight duplication and redundancy.
This modeling technique is referred to as Relationship Mapping. It's used to relate business capabilities to organizational units to highlight areas of duplication and redundancy, as well as to indicate where capabilities are being performed well (green), where there are potential issues (yellow), and where there are significant problems or gaps (red). This visualization helps in understanding the alignment between organizational units and capabilities, and where improvements or changes may be needed.
