NEW QUESTION # 268

Access roles allow the firewall administrator to configure network access according to:

- A. remote access clients.
- B. a combination of computer or computer groups and networks.
- C. users and user groups.
- D. All of the above.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Access roles are objects that define a set of users, machines, or networks that can access a specific network resource. You can create access roles based on any combination of the following criteria:

Users and user groups: You can use users and user groups from various sources, such as LDAP, RADIUS, local database, etc.

Computers or computer groups: You can use computers or computer groups that are identified by their IP address, MAC address, or hostname.

Networks: You can use networks that are defined by their IP address range, subnet mask, or gateway.

You can use access roles in the Source or Destination column of an Access Control rule to allow or deny network access based on the identity of the users, machines, or networks.

NEW QUESTION # 269

Name the authentication method that requires token authenticator.

- A. Radius
- B. SecureID
- C. TACACS
- D. DynamicID

Answer: B

Explanation:

The correct answer is A) SecureID.

SecureID is an authentication method that uses a token-based system to generate one-time passwords (OTPs) for users. Users need to have a physical or software token that displays a code that changes periodically. The code is used along with a personal identification number (PIN) to authenticate the user.

DynamicID is another authentication method that uses OTPs, but it does not require a token. Instead, it sends the OTP to the user's email or phone number.

Radius and TACACS are protocols that allow remote authentication of users through a centralized server. They do not use tokens, but they can support different types of authentication methods, such as passwords, certificates, or OTPs.
