Palo Alto Networks Certified Network Security Engineer Exam Sample Questions (Q158-Q163):

NEW QUESTION # 158

A firewall architect is attempting to install a new Palo Alto Networks NGFW. The company has previously had issues moving all administrative functions onto a data plane interface to meet the design limitations of the environment. The architect is able to access the device for HTTPS and SSH; however, the NGFW can neither validate licensing nor get updates. Which action taken by the architect will resolve this issue?

- A. Create a loopback from the management interface to the data plane interface, then make a service route from the management interface to the data plane interface
- B. Enable OSCP for the data plane interface so the firewall will create a certificate with the data plane interface's IP
- C. Create a service route that sets the source interface to the data plane interface in question
- D. Validate that all upstream devices will allow and properly route the outbound traffic to the external destinations needed

Answer: D

Explanation:

When administrative functions (licensing, updates) use a data plane interface, the firewall requires outbound connectivity to Palo Alto Networks servers (e.g., updates.paloaltonetworks.com) via that interface. If HTTPS /SSH work but licensing/updates fail, the issue is likely upstream blocking or misrouting. Validating upstream devices (Option B) ensures ports (e.g., 443) and destinations are accessible, resolving the issue.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Authentication policy enables you to authenticate end users before they can access services and applications. Whenever a user requests a service or application (such as by visiting a web page), the firewall evaluates Authentication policy. Based on the matching Authentication policy rule, the firewall then prompts the user to authenticate using one or more methods (factors), such as login and password, Voice, SMS, Push, or One-time Password (OTP) authentication
