Axis Network Video Exam Sample Questions (Q73-Q78):

NEW QUESTION # 73
An analog system that should be upgraded to IP using encoders must have the end of the analog signal terminated. How many Ohm () should that be?

- A. 0
- B. 1
- C. 2
- D. 3

Answer: C

Explanation:
When upgrading an analog system to IP using encoders, the end of the analog signal must be terminated with a 75 resistor. This standard impedance ensures proper signal transmission and prevents signal reflections that can degrade the video quality. Terminating the signal correctly is crucial for maintaining the integrity of the video feed in an analog to IP conversion. For more information, refer to Axis Communications' technical documentation on analog to IP conversion and signal termination.

NEW QUESTION # 74
statement best describes how an ACAP works?

- A. The analytic is run on the device
- B. The analytic is run on a cloud server
- C. The analytic is run on a remote server
- D. The analytic is run on a local server

Answer: A

Explanation:
ACAP (Axis Camera Application Platform) analytics run directly on the device. This means that the processing and analysis of data occur on the camera itself, rather than on a separate server or in the cloud.
Running analytics on the device reduces the need for additional hardware and network bandwidth, and it allows for faster decision-making and real-time alerts. This information is confirmed by Axis Communications' documentation on ACAP.

- A. It can be activated and deactivated per stream profile
- B. It is active for all images and videos
- C. Users with operator privileges can deactivate it

Answer: A

Privacy masks in an Axis camera can be activated and deactivated per stream profile. This allows for flexibility in managing different viewing needs and ensuring privacy in specific scenarios. Users can configure privacy masks to appear in one stream but not in another, making it a versatile feature for various applications.
Axis Communications' documentation on privacy masks confirms this capability.
