NEW QUESTION # 356

When developing effective metrics for the measurement of solution delivery, it is MOST important to:

- A. specify quantitative measures for solution delivery.
- B. establish the objectives and expected benefits.
- C. establish project controls and monitoring objectives.
- D. perform an objective analysis of the project roadmap.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Establishing the objectives and expected benefits is the most important step when developing effective metrics for the measurement of solution delivery, because it defines the purpose, scope, and value of the solution and how it aligns with the business goals and needs. By establishing the objectives and expected benefits, IT leaders can identify the key performance indicators (KPIs) that will measure the progress, quality, and outcomes of the solution delivery. KPIs are specific, measurable, achievable, relevant, and time-bound metrics that track and evaluate the performance of the solution delivery against the objectives and expected benefits. KPIs can also help IT leaders to communicate the value proposition of the solution to the stakeholders, monitor and manage the risks and issues that may affect the solution delivery, and ensure that the solution meets or exceeds the expectations of the customers and users. = Automation: metrics that measure success, 4 Types of Key Performance Metrics To Track (With Examples), A guide to measuring benefits effectively

- A. Enterprise acceptable use policy
- B. Orientation training materials
- C. Enterprise risk appetite statement
- D. Employee nondisclosure agreement

Answer: A

Explanation:

An enterprise acceptable use policy is the most important document to update if a decision is made to ban end user-owned devices in the workplace, as it defines and communicates the rules and guidelines for the appropriate and secure use of IT resources and services by the employees and other authorized users. An enterprise acceptable use policy also helps to protect the enterprise's data, assets, and reputation from unauthorized or malicious access, disclosure, or damage¹². Updating the enterprise acceptable use policy to reflect the ban on end user-owned devices can help to ensure compliance, awareness, and enforcement of the decision.
