- B. Instructive
- C. Controlling
- D. Directive

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 1092

A project manager is leading an in-house company project in its very early stages. This current project is similar to another project that ended a year ago. What should the project manager do to analyze the involved stakeholders?

- A. Use lessons learned from the previous project as a guide for the current project's stakeholder register
- B. Document in the risk register that the current project may have different stakeholders than the previous project
- C. Lower the priority of stakeholder engagement as the stakeholders already have knowledge of this kind of project
- D. Refer to the stakeholder register from the previous project as it was similar to the current project

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 1093

A project is comprised of team members who are not engaged and committed to project success. What should the project manager do to address this situation?

- A. Contact the project sponsor to request approval to release the current team and hire replacement personnel.
- B. Call each team member to gain their perspective on the problem, then bring the whole team together to discuss a solution.
- C. Accept the situation knowing there is schedule slack available to release on an incremental basis when necessary.
- D. Send each team member a direct email indicating that disciplinary action is likely if they do not change their attitude.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Engaging with team members individually to understand their perspectives is a crucial step in addressing issues of disengagement and lack of commitment. This approach allows the project manager to identify any underlying problems and work collaboratively with the team to find solutions. It is consistent with the PMBOK Guide's emphasis on leadership and team management, which includes promoting team engagement and managing conflict. Bringing the team together to discuss solutions promotes a collaborative environment and ensures that all voices are heard, fostering a sense of ownership and commitment to the project's success.
