VMware Avi Load Balancer 30.x Administrator Sample Questions (Q155-Q160):

NEW QUESTION # 155

After a successful upgrade of the Avi Controller cluster, the administrator navigates to the Infrastructure > Service Engine page to upgrade the data plane. The administrator sees two Service Engine Groups, 'SEG-PROD' and 'SEG-TEST'. The administrator wants to upgrade the test environment first to validate the new software version. What is the recommended upgrade method for the 'SEG-TEST' group to minimize disruption?

- A. Use the 'Upgrade' button for the entire 'SEG-TEST' group and select the 'Simultaneous' option.
- B. Use the 'Upgrade' button for the entire 'SEG-TEST' group and select the 'Rolling' option.
- C. Delete all the SEs in 'SEG-TEST' and let the Controller redeploy them with the new version.
- D. Manually SSH into each SE in the group and run the upgrade script.

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 156

Which statement is true regarding EC versus RSA certificates?

- A. EC certificates cost less money
- B. Default ECC provides weaker encryption strength than RSA
- C. Processing for ECC is less CPU-intensive than for RSA
- D. Modern browsers no longer support RSA certificates

Answer: C

Explanation:

VMware Avi Load Balancer documentation recommends elliptic-curve cryptography for strong security and better performance compared with traditional RSA key exchange and RSA certificates. ECC generally provides equivalent or stronger security with smaller key sizes, which reduces computational cost during SSL

/TLS processing. Avi sizing and SSL guidance note that RSA keys, especially larger RSA keys, are more computationally expensive than elliptic-curve alternatives. Modern browsers still support RSA certificates, so option B is incorrect. Certificate price depends on certificate authority and commercial policy, not the cryptographic method itself, so option A is not a technical Avi answer. ECC is not weaker by default; properly selected ECC certificates and EC cipher suites are considered strong and efficient. Therefore, the correct statement is that ECC processing is less CPU-intensive than RSA.
