- A. The fortilogd daemon is ahead in indexing by one log.
- B. FortiAnalyzer is indexing logs faster than logs are being received.
- C. The SQL database requires a rebuild because of high receive lag.
- D. FortiAnalyzer is temporarily buffering received logs so older logs can be indexed first.

Answer: B

Explanation:
The exhibit shows a graph that tracks two metrics over time: Receive Rate and Insert Rate.
These two rates are crucial for understanding the log processing behavior in FortiAnalyzer.
Understanding Receive Rate and Insert Rate:
Receive Rate: This is the rate at which FortiAnalyzer is receiving logs from connected devices.
Insert Rate: This is the rate at which FortiAnalyzer is indexing (inserting) logs into its database for storage and analysis.

At 21:20, the Insert Rate line is above the Receive Rate line, indicating that FortiAnalyzer is inserting logs into its database at a faster rate than it is receiving them.
