Salesforce Certified User Experience Designer Sample Questions (Q100-Q105):

NEW QUESTION # 100

Cloud Kicks wants its Salesforce app to represent company branding and comply with Web Content Accessibility Guidelines (WCAG) 2.1.

What should they consider about themes and branding?

- A. The color palette is auto-generated based on the brand color to be WCAG compliant.
- B. Salesforce automatically updates the selected brand color to make it accessible; this should be overridden to select the colors manually.
- C. There is a default WCAG compliant Salesforce color theme; only brand color can be updated.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Themes and branding allow Salesforce app developers to customize the look and feel of their apps to match their company's branding and accessibility standards. One of the features of themes and branding is the ability to select a brand color, which is the primary color used for buttons, links, and highlights. Salesforce automatically generates a color palette based on the brand color, which includes accessible colors that meet the WCAG 2.1 contrast ratio guidelines. This ensures that the app is visually appealing and accessible to users with different color vision abilities. Developers can also customize other aspects of the theme, such as the logo, page background, and default font. References: [Themes and Branding Basics], [Accessibility in Salesforce]

NEW QUESTION # 101

Cloud Kicks hired a UX Designer to help create a form for a wide group of users. After receiving that final requirement, the designer realizes there are too many fields.

What could improve form readability?

- A. Replace field labels with placeholder text.
- B. Create a three-column grid to reduce the form length.
- C. Add section headers to visually separate fields into groups.
- D. Improve form security by adding a challenge-response test.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

This allows users to quickly scan the form and identify the relevant fields, reducing the cognitive load and improving the overall user experience. Salesforce documentation states that "by grouping related fields into sections, you can make your forms easier to read and understand" [1].

NEW QUESTION # 102

The Client Service team at Cloud Kicks is having issues when editing an order record. The validation rule returns a top-of-page error indicating two other fields must be provided to validate and save the order changes.

How should they efficiently find the correct fields?

- A. Replace the top-of-page validation with two field validations, assigning the respective fields.
- B. Replace the validation rule with help text informing the business requirement.
- C. Remove the validation rule completely and provide training about order changes.
- D. Make sure the required field names are added to the top-of-page error message.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation

A top-of-page validation is a type of validation rule that displays an error message at the top of the page when a user tries to save a record that does not meet certain criteria. A field validation is a type of validation rule that displays an error message next to a specific field when a user tries to save a record that does not meet certain criteria. The advantage of using field validations over top-of-page validations is that they provide more clarity and guidance to the user about which fields need to be corrected and why. They also reduce the cognitive load and the scrolling effort for the user, as they can see the error message right next to the field they are editing. Therefore, to help the Client Service team at Cloud Kicks efficiently find the correct fields when editing an order record, the UX designer should replace the top-of-page validation with two field validations, assigning the respective fields that are required to validate and save the order changes.
