The benefit of obtaining the Physical Security Professional Certification

The security world is full of professional certifications, ranging from the plethora of initials offered by ASIS, to homeland security designations, to a fraud examiner's certification, to others related to crisis management, threat management, and even critical incident stress. Do the examination costs, recertification fees and costs, and study time make sense for security professionals to grow in their careers?

For the uninitiated, they mean nothing, other than a long string of initials behind the person's name. To other security professionals, these designations can represent a coded shorthand language that proves the long hours of study and expertise, built around years of experience, in a chosen technical or operational portion of a security career. To external clients looking to hire security consultants for site assessments, private investigations, physical security improvements, or threat assessments and management, these designations may be a required and built-in part of any Request for Proposals (RFPs) they put out.

Insurance investigators and other private investigators who work on forensic accounting or financial cases can get the Certified Fraud Examiner (CFE) designation from the Association of Certified Fraud Examiners. This certification also requires education and professional requirements in accounting and auditing; criminology and sociology; fraud investigations; loss prevention; or the law, along with the completion of a challenging examination.

Some critics of this collection of designations argue that these "alphabet soup" listings are merely résumé builders that provide lucrative application, testing, and recertification fees for the association, not its members, without much real benefit. But this perspective ignores the fact that these certifications are recognized as bona fide in expert-witness court cases around the United States and the world, and they add prestige and value to the holder's professional expertise, education, and status in the security world.

ASIS Physical Security Professional Exam Sample Questions (Q33-Q38):

NEW QUESTION # 33

The systems that utilized in communities that have a municipal alarm system are called:

- A. Main system
- B. Warning system
- C. Auxiliary system
- D. Alert system

Answer: C

Explanation:

Auxiliary systems are fire alarm systems that are connected directly to a municipal fire alarm system, such as those operated by a local fire department. These systems provide immediate notification to the authorities in the event of an alarm activation and are commonly found in buildings located within cities with centralized emergency response networks.

Warning system (A), Main system (C), and Alert system (D) are not formal classifications of municipal- linked fire alarm systems.

NEW QUESTION # 34

The number of security personnel required is generally inversely proportional to the size of the facility, expressed both in terms of square footage or acreage and the number of employees involved.

- A. True
- B. False

Answer: B

Explanation:

The number of security personnel required is typically directly proportional to the size and complexity of a facility, not inversely. Larger facilities or those with more employees often require more security staff to ensure adequate coverage, surveillance, access control, and emergency response. Factors influencing personnel needs include square footage, asset value, location, threat level, and operational hours.

The statement in the question is incorrect, making the correct answer "False." References:

NEW QUESTION # 35

Which of the following is the most widely accepted classification of skills for the leadership?

- A. Human relations
- B. Skill Mix
- C. Conceptual
- D. All of the above

Answer: D

Explanation:

The most widely accepted classification of leadership skills includes:

Conceptual skills: Ability to think abstractly and see the "big picture" Human relations skills: Interpersonal and communication capabilities Technical skills: Expertise and proficiency in specific tasks These skill sets are collectively known as the "skill mix" and are essential for effective security leadership.

NEW QUESTION # 36

What refers to the number of employees over which any individual can exercise direct supervision effectively?

- A. None of the above
- B. Delegate control
- C. Corporate period
- D. Span of control

Answer: D

Explanation:

Span of control refers to the number of subordinates or direct reports that a manager or supervisor can effectively oversee. A narrower span (fewer direct reports) typically allows for closer supervision, while a wider span may require more autonomy among subordinates.

In security management, span of control helps determine appropriate team structures and resource allocation, especially in large-scale operations.

NEW QUESTION # 37

A new research and development center is being planned. At what point in the project should the security manager become involved?

- A. Initial design phase
- B. Concept presentation to senior management
- C. Completion of the preliminary architectural drawings
- D. Equipment specification and bid phase

Answer: A

Explanation:

Security input is most effective when introduced during the initial design phase of a facility. This allows for integration of security considerations into architectural planning, site layout, and system infrastructure before major design decisions are finalized.

A and B are too late in the process.

D (Concept presentation) is usually too early and conceptual for detailed security input.
