NEW QUESTION # 14

What is a recommended practice for securing historians and databases whose purpose is to feed data back into the control processes?

- A. Audit both successful and failed login attempts to databases
- B. Use reliable network protocols like HTTP for remote management
- C. Use a dedicated domain admin user account to manage databases
- D. Facilitate auditing by placing historians and databases in the same DMZ

Answer: A

Explanation:

For systems such as historians and databases critical to control processes, it is important to maintain comprehensive security monitoring, including:

Auditing both successful and failed login attempts (A) to detect unauthorized access attempts and provide accountability.
Placing systems in the same DMZ (B) may increase exposure; segmentation is usually preferred.
Using domain admin accounts (C) increases risk by providing excessive privileges; least privilege is recommended.
HTTP (D) is not recommended for management due to lack of encryption; secure protocols like HTTPS or SSH should be used.
GICSP emphasizes rigorous auditing and monitoring as essential for detecting and preventing insider threats and unauthorized access to critical ICS data.
