AAVSB Veterinary Technician National Exam Sample Questions (Q188-Q193):

NEW QUESTION # 188

What is the surgery of choice for prostatitis?

- A. Purse string
- B. Intestinal resection
- C. Anal sac removal
- D. Castration

Answer: D

Explanation:

Castration is the surgery of choice for prostatitis. The prostate is an accessory sex gland, so it is heavily affected by the hormones produced by the testicles.

Anal sac removal, placement of a purse string, or an intestinal resection would not benefit patients with prostatitis.

NEW QUESTION # 189

Radiographic contrast media is used to improve visualization of specific anatomical structures on radiographs. Which of the following choices is used as a negative contrast agent?

- A. Barium sulfate
- B. Gadolinium
- C. Carbon dioxide
- D. Iohexol

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 190

When preparing your specimens and test request forms, all of the following should be included in the paperwork and on any samples except which of the following?

- A. Age
- B. Species
- C. Unique patient identifier
- D. Clinic's name and contact information

Answer: A

Explanation:

It is critical to fill out the paperwork completely when preparing a sample. However, at a minimum, the lab needs to know:

*The test to run

*The species (reference ranges, reagents, and other factors may vary with species)

*The clinic's contact information - usually, at minimum, a phone number or fax and the practice's name

*The clinic's client number with the lab

*The unique patient identifier - this may be the client's name and pet's name and/or a variety of other identifiers, usually how the pet is tied into the computer software of the specific practice While the pet's age may be valuable, reference ranges are generally species-specific, not based on age. If an interpretation of the results is requested, then the age would be necessary for that interpretation. However, generally speaking, age isn't required.

NEW QUESTION # 191

A veterinarian is treating a horse with acute colic. Which of the following medications may be administered?

- A. Flunixin meglumine (NSAID)
- B. Butorphanol (opioid)
- C. Detomidine (alpha-2 agonist)
- D. All are routinely used

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 192

You have a horse client who routinely self-treats his horses without calling for an evaluation. He often retains leftover medications, and recently had a horse who was not training right. His gait was off, and he didn't seem to want to run at full gallop. The owner had Banamine at home from another horse. The previously prescribed horse was a Percheron, who stood 18 hands. Today's horse of concern, a warmblood, only stands 15.5 hands and is in an appropriate body condition. The owner finally calls you because the horse isn't eating much the past few days and seems lethargic. Additionally, today, he has been stretching out more in strange postures and grinding his teeth.

What do you discuss with the owner as a possible cause?

- A. Probable GI ulceration secondary to NSAID use
- B. Gastrointestinal parasitism
- C. Colic
- D. Endocrine disease

Answer: A

Explanation:

Banamine (flunixin meglumine) is a common NSAID (non-steroidal anti-inflammatory) pain medication used in large animals. However, GI side effects can occur in most species. In dogs, we tend to see vomiting and/or diarrhea and, less commonly, GI ulceration. However, in horses, ulceration can occur more commonly.

While we do not know the actual weight of the current horse, just given the size measurements and breeds mentioned, the Percheron, who was originally prescribed a specific weight-based dose vs. the current smaller warm blood, should spark concern. He was likely overdosing the horse on the NSAID, increasing the risk of ulceration.

Anorexia or decreased appetite, lack of desire to run at a gallop, and lethargy are vague signs. They could suggest a lameness or other painful musculoskeletal issue or something systemic. The abnormal posturing and stretching suggest more closely and more likely abdominal disease. The patient doesn't appear to be rolling, kicking at himself, or showing other more severe signs consistent with colic. No diarrhea is described, and often GI parasites alone won't cause the other clinical signs.

Again, we are choosing the best answer given the history provided. We must consider NSAID toxicity or overdose and GI ulcerations first because it fits. We are triaging over the phone to give the owner information. A variety of endocrine diseases could be present and can manifest in many ways, including causing GI ulceration. But the key here is recognizing that the NSAIDs may be a problem and advising the owner to discontinue them and to have the horse evaluated at the clinic or via a farm visit as soon as possible.
