You want to create a container that is reachable from its host's network. Does this action accomplish this?

Solution: Use either EXPOSE or --publish to access the containers on the bridge network

NEW QUESTION # 123

Two development teams in your organization use Kubernetes and want to deploy their applications while ensuring that Kubernetes-specific resources, such as secrets, are grouped together for each application.

Is this a way to accomplish this?

Solution: Create one namespace for each application and add all the resources to it.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 124

Can this set of commands identify the published port(s) for a container?

Solution: 'docker port inspect', docker container inspect"

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

The set of commands `docker port inspect` and `docker container inspect` will not identify the published port(s) for a container. The reason is that there is no such command as `docker port inspect`. The correct command to inspect the port mappings of a container is `docker port`. The command `docker container inspect` can also show the port mappings of a container, but it will display a lot of other information as well, so it is not as concise as `docker port`. To identify the published port(s) for a container, you can use either of these commands:

- * `docker port CONTAINER` will list all the port mappings of the container1.
- * `docker port CONTAINER PRIVATE_PORT` will list only the port mapping of the specified private port of the container1.
- * `docker container inspect --format=' { {NetworkSettings.Ports}} ' CONTAINER` will list only the port mappings of the container in a JSON format23.

For example, if you have a container named `web` that publishes port 80 to port 8080 on the host, you can use any of these commands to identify the published port:

$ docker port web
80/tcp -> 0.0.0.0:8080
$ docker port web 80
0.0.0.0:8080
$ docker container inspect --format=' { {NetworkSettings.Ports}} ' web
map[80/tcp:[map[HostIp:0.0.0.0 HostPort:8080]]]
