NEW QUESTION # 746

A quality director has been tasked with the responsibility for education and implementation of a new process improvement initiative. To affect the needed change in culture, the quality director should

- A. Maintain visibility and engage throughout the process
- B. Communicate that the costs are justified by the benefits
- C. Require regular quarterly reporting on progress
- D. Establish training for managers and supervisors

Answer: A

Explanation:

Changing organizational culture for a process improvement initiative requires leadership presence, engagement, and role modeling to build trust and commitment.

Option A (Establish training for managers and supervisors): Training is important but focuses on skills, not cultural change, which requires broader engagement.

Option B (Communicate that the costs are justified by the benefits): Cost-benefit communication may support buy-in but does not directly drive cultural change.

Option C (Maintain visibility and engage throughout the process): This is the correct answer. The NAHQ CPHQ study guide states, "Cultural change requires visible leadership engagement to model behaviors, build trust, and sustain momentum for improvement initiatives" (Domain 3). The quality director's active involvement fosters a culture of quality.

Option D (Require regular quarterly reporting on progress): Reporting monitors progress but does not directly influence culture, which relies on leadership presence.

CPHQ Objective Reference: Domain 3: Organizational Leadership, Objective 3.3, "Foster a culture of quality through leadership engagement," emphasizes visibility and engagement. The NAHQ study guide notes, "Leaders must be actively involved to drive cultural change for quality" (Domain 3).

Rationale: Visible engagement by the quality director ensures cultural alignment, as per CPHQ's leadership principles for quality improvement.

- A. Chi-square test
- B. case-mix adjustment
- C. weighted average
- D. analysis of variance

Answer: B

Explanation:

NEW QUESTION # 748

A manager can build psychological safety among their team by:

- A. Posting the unit goals in the breakroom after they are developed by the management team
- B. Allowing employees to discuss items on the agenda that is created by the management team
- C. Making a change to the employees' schedule without the input of the unit scheduler.
- D. Conducting a collaborative debrief with the team after a medication error is detected.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Psychological safety refers to an environment where team members feel safe to express concerns, admit mistakes, and offer ideas without fear of punishment or ridicule (Edmondson, Psychological Safety, 2019).

Conducting collaborative debriefs after incidents such as medication errors promotes openness, shared learning, and trust. This approach encourages reporting and teamwork essential for patient safety and continuous improvement (The Joint Commission, Patient Safety Culture, 2024). Options A, C, and D are more top-down, offering limited opportunity for team engagement or shared ownership. A collaborative debrief embodies principles of inclusiveness and respect, critical components of psychological safety.

- A. Educate stakeholders on regulatory requirements
- B. Demonstrate to stakeholders the impact poorly maintained problem lists have on patient safety
- C. Assess stakeholders' knowledge of the origins of the problem list
- D. Explain that leadership wants to improve the documentation process

Answer: B

Explanation:

The NAHQ CPHQ exam blueprint references Kotter's Change Model, which begins with creating a sense of urgency. Stakeholders must understand why change is necessary before they will engage.

Option A is correct because demonstrating patient safety risks creates urgency and emotional buy-in, which is essential for successful change.

Options B, C, and D provide information but do not create urgency. The CPHQ framework emphasizes that effective change begins by connecting improvement efforts to patient harm and organizational risk.
