NEW QUESTION # 1091

Multi-threaded applications are more at risk than single-threaded applications to

- A. database injection.
- B. packet sniffing.
- C. virus infection.
- D. race conditions.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Multi-threaded applications are more at risk than single-threaded applications to race conditions. A race condition is a type of concurrency error that occurs when two or more threads access or modify the same shared resource without proper synchronization or coordination. This may result in inconsistent, unpredictable, or erroneous outcomes, as the final result depends on the timing and order of the thread execution. Race conditions can compromise the security, reliability, and functionality of the application, and can lead to data corruption, memory leaks, deadlock, or privilege escalation<sup>12</sup>.
