NEW QUESTION # 96

Your administrator creates a Pipeline definition to manage metadata, and data for your Planning application.
Which statement about pipelines is true?

- A. Quickly drill into data slices that are important to you with pipelines.
- B. Develop pipelines to guide you through the Planning process.
- C. Use pipelines as a visible, automated, and repeatable system of record for running an application.
- D. Use pipelines to coordinate the running of a series of jobs as a single process.

Answer: D

Explanation:
In Oracle Planning 2024, a Pipeline is a feature that allows administrators to define and automate a sequence of jobs (e.g., data imports, metadata updates, calculations) as a single, coordinated process. Pipelines streamline the management of metadata and data by executing multiple tasks in a specified order, ensuring dependencies are met, and providing a repeatable workflow for maintaining the Planning application.
* A. Develop pipelines to guide you through the Planning process: Incorrect. Pipelines are not a planning guide; they are an automation tool for executing jobs, not a process framework.
* B. Use pipelines as a visible, automated, and repeatable system of record for running an application:
Incorrect. While pipelines are automated and repeatable, they are not a "system of record" for running the entire application-they focus on specific job sequences.
* C. Use pipelines to coordinate the running of a series of jobs as a single process: Correct. This aligns with the Oracle definition of pipelines, which orchestrate multiple jobs (e.g., import data, refresh database) into one executable process.
* D. Quickly drill into data slices that are important to you with pipelines: Incorrect. Pipelines are not designed for data analysis or drilling into data slices; they are for job automation.
The Oracle documentation emphasizes that pipelines are used to manage and execute a series of jobs efficiently, making C the true statement.
