NEW QUESTION # 292

What is a key element used in a vBond Orchestrator redundancy topology?

- A. fully qualified domain name
- B. DHCP server
- C. stun server
- D. load-balancer with health probes

Answer: A

Explanation:

In Cisco SD-WAN architecture, the vBond Orchestrator plays a crucial role in the initial device onboarding and control plane security. Ensuring redundancy for vBond Orchestrators is essential for maintaining high availability and reliability in the SD-WAN network.

* Fully Qualified Domain Name (FQDN): The use of an FQDN is a key element in vBond Orchestrator redundancy. By configuring multiple vBond Orchestrators with the same FQDN, the SD-WAN devices can resolve this domain name to different IP addresses corresponding to the different vBond Orchestrator instances. This allows for automatic failover and load balancing among the vBond Orchestrators.

* Redundancy Mechanism: The DNS mechanism will resolve the FQDN to a list of IP addresses, and in case one vBond is unreachable, another can be contacted. This approach ensures continuous availability and redundancy without requiring manual reconfiguration of the devices.

NEW QUESTION # 294

Which encryption algorithm secures binding exchanges Between Cisco TrustSec SXP peers?

- A. 3DES
- B. SEAL
- C. AES
- D. MD5

Answer: C

Explanation:

Cisco TrustSec (CTS) is a technology that enables secure access and dynamic role-based access control in the network. The Security Group Tag (SGT) Exchange Protocol (SXP) is used to propagate SGTs across network devices. To ensure the secure exchange of these tags, Cisco uses encryption algorithms.

* AES (Advanced Encryption Standard): AES is widely used in many security protocols and standards because of its strong encryption capabilities. In the context of Cisco TrustSec, AES is the encryption algorithm used to secure binding exchanges between SXP peers. It provides robust encryption, ensuring the integrity and confidentiality of the data being exchanged.

* Implementation: When configuring SXP peers, the AES encryption ensures that the SGT information transmitted is secure and cannot be intercepted or tampered with by unauthorized entities.
