Which three features of CloudBoost provide replication to the cloud services? (Choose three.)

- A. encryption, and compression before transfer to the cloud
- B. No on-premises infrastructure required
- C. Fast restore from long-term, in-cloud copies
- D. Low-cost cloud object storage for all backup copies
- E. Fast restore from short-term, on-premises copies

Answer: A,B,D

Explanation:

Deduplication, encryption, and compression before transfer to the cloud CloudBoost performs inline deduplication, compression and AES#256 encryption on the client side (or in#appliance) so that only minimal, secure data is sent to the cloud object store.

Low#cost cloud object storage for all backup copies

All backup copies - both short#term and long#term - are written to inexpensive, deduplicated cloud object storage (e.g. AWS S3, Azure Blob, ECS), driving down retention costs.

No on#premises infrastructure required

You can deploy CloudBoost as a virtual appliance directly in public clouds (AWS, Azure, VMware), so no dedicated on#prem hardware is needed to replicate backups into cloud services.
