QUESTION # 26
A custom cron job has been added to an Adobe Commerce system to collect data for several reports. Its cron tab configuration is as follows:

```
*/10 * * * * /usr/bin/php /var/www/html/magento2/bin/magento cron:run &> /var/log/magento2/cron.log

The cron job instance and runs for between 20 and 30 minutes each night. Within a few days of deployment, it is noticed that the site's Unisync module has not been updated since the new job was added. What should be done to fix this issue?

- A. Create a new cron group for the reporting job. Recalling a cron job's group is Unisync, so it runs separately.
- B. Break the data gathering job into a number of smaller jobs, so that each individual job runs for a maximum of 5 minutes.
- C. Change the cron schedule of the reporting cron job to 30 * * * * so that it runs after the Unisync reporting cron job has completed.

Answer: A
Explanation
Explanation
This will ensure that the reporting job runs in its own provider, separate from other cron jobs, and will not interfere with the Unisync reporting cron job. This will ensure that the Unisync cron job runs an hour after the reporting job is finished, ensuring that the Unisync cron is always up to date.

QUESTION # 27
An Adobe Commerce Admin is troubleshooting an issue on an Adobe Commerce Cloud project. That project has a Staging Database and a Production Database. The developer migrates the Staging Database to Production in readiness for Go Live. However, when the developer tests the migrated database, the new products do not appear in the frontend. The developer checks the Varnish Cache and finds cleared. Staging seems to work as expected. Production was working before the database migration. What is the likely cause?

- A. The Product variants in the Production Database are incorrect.
- B. A deployment should have been done on Production to initialize Product variants.
- C. The URLs in the Production Database are the URLs of the Staging Database and must be updated.

Answer: B
Explanation
Explanation
The likely cause of the issue is that a deployment should have been done on Production to initialize Product variants. This is because when the database is migrated from Staging to Production, any changes made in the Staging environment are not reflected in the Production environment until a deployment is made. This prohibits any changes made to the Varnish Cache, which needs to be cleared in order for the new products to appear on the frontend.
