NEW QUESTION # 91

Ann, a user, reports to the security team that her browser began redirecting her to random sites while using her Windows laptop. Ann further reports that the OS shows the C: drive is out of space despite having plenty of space recently. Ann claims she not downloaded anything. The security team obtains the laptop and begins to investigate, noting the following:

- File access auditing is turned off.
- When clearing up disk space to make the laptop functional, files that appear to be cached web pages are immediately created in a temporary directory, filling up the available drive space. All processes running appear to be legitimate processes for this user and machine.
- Network traffic spikes when the space is cleared on the laptop.
- No browser is open.

Which of the following initial actions and tools would provide the BEST approach to determining what is happening?

- A. Review logins to the laptop, search Windows Event Viewer, and review Wireshark captures.
- B. Perform a hard power down of the laptop, take a dd image, and analyze with FTK.
- C. Disable the network connection, check Sysinternals Process Explorer, and review netstat output.
- D. Delete the temporary files, run an Nmap scan, and utilize Burp Suite.
