Refer to the exhibit. An engineer is troubleshooting an issue where switch LEAF-SW-1 and switch LEAF- SW-2 receive corrupted forwarding and learning information about each other. LEAF-SW-1 and LEAF-SW-2 are configured with BGP EVPN VTEP. Which action resolves the issue?

- A. On each switch, ensure the same BGP router ID is configured.
- B. On each switch, configure a different secondary IP address against interface loopback0.
- C. On each switch, run the delete suppress-arp command against interface nve1.
- D. On LEAF-SW-1, run the host-reachability protocol bgp command against interface nve1.

Answer: D

Explanation:
In a VXLAN BGP EVPN fabric, each VTEP (NVE interface) must useBGP EVPN as the host-reachability protocolso that MAC/IP information and VTEP reachability are exchanged through the control plane.
From the exhibit:
* LEAF-SW-1 - interface nve1
* source-interface loopback0
* No host-reachability protocol bgp
* Host Learning Mode: Data-Plane in show nve interface
* LEAF-SW-2 - interface nve1
* source-interface loopback0
* host-reachability protocol bgp configured
This mismatch causes one VTEP to rely ondata-plane flood-and-learn, while the other usesEVPN BGP control-plane learning, leading to inconsistent and "corrupted" MAC/IP and ARP/ND information between the leaf switches.

The fix is to configure LEAF-SW-1 to also use BGP for host reachability:
interface nve1
host-reachability protocol bgp
Options B and D are incorrect because anycast VTEP designs intentionally share the sameprimaryloopback IP while usingdifferent secondary IPsandunique BGP router IDs. Option A (removing suppress-arp) does not correct the control-plane mismatch.
Therefore, enabling host-reachability protocol bgp on LEAF-SW-1 (OptionC) resolves the issue.
