NEW QUESTION # 67

Which of the following statements best defines the "authorization" as a component of identity, entitlement, and access management?

- A. Checking data storage to make sure it meets compliance requirements
- B. Enforcing the rules by which access is granted to the resources
- C. Giving a third party vendor permission to work on your cloud solution

NEW QUESTION # 68

Which of the following best describes the primary purpose of image factories in the context of virtual machine (VM) management?

- A. Managing network configurations for VMs
- B. Providing backup solutions for VM images
- C. Enhancing security of VM images
- D. Automating the VM image creation processes

Answer: D

Explanation:

Correct Option: A. Automating the VM image creation processes

Image factories are tools or systems designed to automate the building and maintenance of virtual machine images. They ensure that images are consistently created, updated, and patched, which is essential for maintaining a secure and manageable cloud infrastructure.

From the CSA Security Guidance v4.0 - Domain 8: Virtualization and Containers:

"Image factories are systems that automate the creation of virtual machine images. They help ensure that base images are consistently built and can include controls for security, configuration management, and compliance."

- Domain 8: Virtualization and Containers, CSA Security Guidance v4.0

These factories often integrate with CI/CD pipelines to streamline deployment and reduce human error - a key concern in cloud security operations.

Why the Other Options Are Incorrect:

* B. Managing network configurations for VMs# This task is typically handled by orchestration layers or cloud networking tools, not image factories.

* C. Providing backup solutions for VM images# Image factories are not responsible for backups; they are focused on creation, not preservation.

* D. Enhancing security of VM images# While image factories can embed security best practices during creation, their primary purpose is automation, not security enhancement per se.

* Main Topic: Virtualization and Containers
