NEW QUESTION # 127
From the Discovery Status record, which of the following does a Device record contain?

- A. the CMDB Health Dashboard link
- B. the contents of the discovered CI

- C. contains a link to the discovered Cl
- D. contains a link to the discovered Asset

Answer: C

Explanation:
From the Discovery Status record, a Device record in ServiceNow Discovery contains a link to the discovered Configuration Item (CI). This link provides direct access to the CI record that was discovered and processed during the discovery cycle. The Device record does not contain the contents of the CI, a link to the discovered Asset, or a link to the CMDB Health Dashboard.
References = ServiceNow Discovery documentation, focusing on the details of Discovery Status records and the information contained within Device records.

NEW QUESTION # 128
Which of the following describes the recommended permission level for credentials to discover Windows Servers?

- A. A domain administrator with sudo access
- B. A standard domain user with read access
- C. A userr00t access across the domain
- D. A domain user with local administrator access

Answer: D

Explanation:
For discovering Windows Servers, ServiceNow Discovery recommends using credentials that have a domain user account with local administrator access on the target servers. This level of access ensures that Discovery can successfully execute the necessary probes and sensors to collect comprehensive data about the server without being restricted by permission limitations. The other options either provide excessive permissions (like a domain administrator with sudo access) or insufficient privileges (like a standard domain user with read access).
