NEW QUESTION # 123

The team is using Personas to model customer needs and experiences. They are most likely working in the following horizon?

- A. Reviews Horizon
- B. Initiative Horizon
- C. Strategic Horizon
- D. Delivery Horizon

Answer: B

Explanation:

Personas are archetypal representations of users used to understand their goals, behaviors, and pain points.

While personas can be established during strategy sessions, they are most heavily utilized at the Initiative Horizon to help model customer needs and guide the development of specific solution components. At this level, the team uses personas to refine features, prioritize the backlog, and evaluate which solution options will provide the most value to specific user segments. This technique ensures the team "Thinks as a Customer," preventing the development of generic functionality that fails to resonate with actual users.

By applying personas at the Initiative Horizon, the team creates a more targeted product vision and ensures that the criteria for success are directly linked to the user 's experience and business outcomes.

NEW QUESTION # 124

In a planning workshop the team breaks down the product backlog increment and can assign work to members of the team. This is referred to as:

- A. User story writing
- B. Task planning
- C. Resource planning
- D. Release planning
