CMA Certified Professional Category Manager (CPCM) Sample Questions (Q54-Q59):

NEW QUESTION # 54

What is the primary purpose of a category health assessment in category management?

- A. To determine the pricing strategy for all products in a category.
- B. To identify the most popular product in a category based on sales data.
- C. To evaluate the performance, strengths, and weaknesses of a product category relative to market expectations, competitor benchmarks, and internal goals.
- D. To forecast future trends in consumer behavior for a product category.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The correct answer is D .

A category health assessment is not a single pricing, product-ranking, or forecasting exercise. It is a structured review of category performance, using internal and external comparisons to identify what is strong, weak, threatening, or opportunistic. The official CPCM course describes Measuring Category Health as covering how to complete a category health assessment, including "internal and external influences," consumer, trends, economy, competition, and tactics related to winning segments and brands. It also states that SWOT analysis captures the most important "strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats" in the category.

Option A is too narrow because pricing is only one category tactic. Option B is only item ranking and does not evaluate overall category health. Option C is too predictive-focused; forecasting can support planning, but category health assessment is broader and includes current performance, benchmarks, competition, tactics, and opportunities.

NEW QUESTION # 55

Which of the following KPIs is most critical for resolving on-shelf availability issues in the retail supply chain?

- A. Order Cycle Time
- B. Gross Margin
- C. Inventory Turnover
- D. Fill Rate

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is B .

On-shelf availability problems are supply-chain execution problems: the product must be available when the shopper wants to buy it. CMKG explains that supply chain affects inventory, forecasting, availability, cash flow, service levels, and shopper experience. Fill Rate is the most direct KPI among the options because it measures the ability to fulfill demand from available stock without lost sales or backorders. A weak fill rate leads directly to out-of-stocks and poor shelf availability.

Option A, Inventory Turnover, measures how quickly inventory sells through, but high turnover does not guarantee shelf availability. Option C, Gross Margin, is a financial metric, not an availability KPI. Option D, Order Cycle Time, measures replenishment speed, but it does not directly show whether customer or store demand is being fulfilled. Fill Rate is the best answer.

NEW QUESTION # 56

Which statement best describes the relationship between space and assortment in retail planning?

- A. Space always comes first and assortment is chosen to fill it exactly.
- B. The amount of available space can limit assortment and assortment choices can influence how space is allocated.
- C. Space planning decisions are made independently of assortment planning.
- D. Assortment always comes first and space is adjusted afterward.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The correct answer is B .

Space and assortment are interdependent. CMKG directly states that space planning and efficient assortment are both very important and explains that many roles across the organization make decisions affecting product assortment and the shelf. CMKG also warns that planograms and assortment work must consider out-of-stocks, turns, profit, sales, inventory, shopper needs, and retailer strategy.

Option B is the only answer that captures the two-way relationship. Available shelf space can limit how many items, sizes, brands, and segments can fit. At the same time, assortment choices influence how much space must be allocated to each segment, brand, or SKU.

Option A is wrong because assortment cannot be finalized without space constraints. Option C is also wrong because space alone does not determine the assortment; shopper demand, category strategy, item productivity, and role matter. Option D is completely wrong because space planning and assortment planning should not be handled independently.

NEW QUESTION # 57

What does the Product Demographic Affinity Profile (PDAP) Index measure?

- A. The likelihood of a product succeeding in a new market.
- B. The strength of a demographic group's preference for a product or category compared to the general population.
- C. The percentage of a product's sales within a specific region.
- D. The total sales of a product to all demographic groups.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The correct answer is A .

The Product Demographic Affinity Profile (PDAP) Index measures how strongly a product or category aligns with a demographic group compared with the general population. In store clustering, this is critical because it links product demand to the demographic makeup around each store. ARC's category-specific store clustering guidance identifies PDAP as the step where product sales and total sales by demographic are analyzed to understand product affinity.

Option A is therefore the best answer because it captures the comparative nature of the index: it is not just raw sales; it is the strength of preference relative to the broader population.

Option B is wrong because total sales by demographic does not itself measure affinity. Option C is too broad because product success in a new market would require demand, competition, pricing, distribution, and execution analysis. Option D is regional sales mix, not demographic affinity.

NEW QUESTION # 58

How many units do we need to sell at $16 to Break-Even on Gross Profit?

Item A Price	Item A Gross Profit	Item A Units Sold
$20	$6	100
$16	$2	X

- A. 0
- B. 1
- C. 2
- D. 3

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is A .

The original gross profit dollars are calculated from the current gross profit per unit multiplied by units sold:

$$6 \text{ gross profit} \times 100 \text{ units} = $600 \text{ total gross profit}$

At the lower $16 price, the gross profit per unit drops to $2 . To break even on total gross profit, the item must still generate $600 in gross profit dollars.

Calculation:

$$600 \div $2 \text{ gross profit per unit} = 300 \text{ units}$

So the item must sell 300 units at the $16 price to break even on gross profit.

This aligns with CPCM pricing analytics because CMKG identifies breakeven analysis as a pricing measure and explains that break-even is where total costs and total sales meet. CMKG also states that pricing analytics must be understood for both calculation and strategic implication.

Option B is wrong because selling 100 units at $2 gross profit only generates $200, which is far below the original $600. Option C gives $250 gross profit, still too low. Option D would generate $1,200 gross profit, which exceeds break-even.
