Which statement describes MPP (Massively Parallel Processing) Database architecture?

- A. A transactional system which uses multiple nodes for maximum availability.
- B. An analytics environment that improves performance by dividing the data across many nodes.
- C. A data warehouse that needs all compute nodes to access a shared data store simultaneously.
- D. Two or more databases kept in sync via two-phase commit.

Answer: B

Explanation:

MPP, or Massively Parallel Processing, is a database architecture model where data is divided and processed across multiple compute nodes in parallel. Each node works independently on a portion of the data, dramatically improving query performance and throughput for analytics workloads. This model is ideal for big data and analytical queries, not transactional workloads. It differs from shared-disk models or replication strategies like two-phase commit. The correct definition involves distributed data and parallel query execution, as described in option C.
