NEW QUESTION # 207

A global financial institution is implementing data masking technology to protect personal data used for testing purposes in non-production environments. Which of the following is the GREATEST challenge in this situation?

- A. Complex relationships within and across systems must be retained for testing.
- B. Personal data across the various interconnected systems cannot be easily identified.
- C. Access to personal data is not strictly controlled in development and testing environments.
- D. Data masking tools are complex and difficult to implement.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Data masking is the process of hiding original data with modified content to protect sensitive data from unauthorized access or disclosure. Data masking is often used for testing purposes in non-production environments, where personal data is not needed or allowed. However, data masking can pose several challenges, especially for a global financial institution that has multiple interconnected systems and applications. One of the greatest challenges is to preserve the complex relationships within and across systems while masking the data. This means that the masked data must maintain the same format, referential integrity, semantic integrity, and uniqueness as the original data, so that the testing results are valid and reliable. For example, if a customer's name is masked in one system, it must be masked consistently in all other systems that reference it. If a transaction amount is masked in one system, it must not violate any business rules or constraints in another system. If a credit card number is masked in one system, it must still be a valid credit card number in another system. Preserving these complex relationships can be challenging because it requires a thorough understanding of the data model, the business logic, and the dependencies among systems. It also requires a robust and flexible data masking tool that can handle different types of data and platforms.

NEW QUESTION # 208

Which of the following practices BEST indicates an organization follows the data minimization principle?

- A. Data is only accessible on a need-to-know basis.
- B. Data is regularly reviewed for its relevance
- C. Data is encrypted before storage.
- D. Data is pseudonymized when being backed up.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The practice that best indicates an organization follows the data minimization principle is that data is regularly reviewed for its relevance. The data minimization principle is one of the core principles of data protection under various laws and regulations, such as the GDPR or the CCPA. It states that personal data should be adequate, relevant, and limited to what is necessary in relation to the purposes for which they are processed. By regularly reviewing the data they hold, organizations can ensure that they do not collect or retain excessive or unnecessary data that may pose privacy risks or violate data subject rights.

Data is pseudonymized when being backed up, data is encrypted before storage, or data is only accessible on a need-to-know basis are also good practices for data protection, but they do not directly indicate that the organization follows the data minimization principle. Pseudonymization is a process of replacing identifying information in data with artificial identifiers or pseudonyms.

Pseudonymization can help enhance the privacy of data by reducing the linkability between data and data subjects, but it does not prevent re-identification or inference attacks. Encryption is a process of transforming data into an unreadable form using a secret key or algorithm. Encryption can help protect the confidentiality, integrity, and availability of data by preventing unauthorized access,
