NEW QUESTION # 117

An AEM customer wants to automate the aggregation of Cloud Manager pipeline execution metrics into a custom performance dashboard application. The system administrator of the custom application recommends that the website project team use their CI/CD server to collect the relevant data from Cloud Manager and upload it to the dashboard every 30 minutes.

Which steps should the DevOps engineer take?

- A. 1. In Cloud Manager, open the Developer Console. 2. Click the "Get Service Credentials" button on the Integrations tab.
- B. 1. Add a new user account in Admin Console for the CI server agent. 2. Add the account to the "Cloud Manager - Developer" and "Cloud Manager - Deployment Manager" Product Profiles.
- C. 1. Create a new project in the Adobe I/O Console. 2. Add an API integration for the "Cloud Manager" service using a generated key pair.

Answer: C

Explanation:

To allow an external system (like a CI/CD server or custom dashboard) to programmatically interact with Cloud Manager (such as fetching pipeline metrics), you must set up a server-to-server API integration. This is done via the Adobe Developer Console (Adobe I/O). The DevOps engineer must create a new project, add the Cloud Manager API service, and configure authentication using a public/private key pair (typically generating a JWT token for secure, headless authentication). Adding standard user accounts (Option A) is an anti-pattern for system integrations because it relies on interactive logins or brittle basic auth.
