Adobe Experience Manager DevOps Engineer Expert Sample Questions

(Q42-Q47):

NEW QUESTION # 42

A DevOps engineer notices that a system occasionally gets slower.

- * No deployment has been recently performed.
- * After a restart of the instance, the performance degradation is mitigated.
- * If no action is taken, the JVM tends to crash in an unpredictable manner with Out Of Memory exceptions.
- * There is no clear correlation between visitor peaks and crashes of the instances.
- * The same symptoms affect author and publish instances.

What is causing this issue?

- A. The access rights strategy has too many groups and too many ACLs.
- B. JCR sessions are not closed properly.
- C. The data store used is not appropriate.
- D. There are too many concurrent users.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Unclosed JCR sessions are a classic cause of memory leaks in AEM applications. When custom backend code opens a JCR Session or ResourceResolver but fails to close it within a finally block, the garbage collector cannot reclaim that memory. Over time, these open sessions accumulate in the heap memory, causing the system to slow down and eventually leading to unpredictable OutOfMemory (OOM) crashes. Restarting the instance clears the heap, temporarily mitigating the issue until the unclosed sessions build up again. This issue is agnostic of visitor peaks or runmodes (author/publish).
