dbt Labs dbt Analytics Engineering Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q281-Q286):

NEW QUESTION # 281

Which of the following are essential elements of a well-structured pull request description?

- A. A concise title summarizing the overall changes.
- B. Explanations of the reasoning behind major changes and implementation choices.
- C. References to related issues in the project tracker, if applicable.
- D. Detailed logs of each Git command used during development.

Answer: A,B,C

Explanation:

A: Clear titles aid quick understanding of the PRs purpose. C: Explanations help reviewers and future developers understand the thought process behind the code. D: Issue references create traceability and context.

NEW QUESTION # 282

(Multiple Select)

- A. The dbt run will succeed, but the staging model will have null values due to the missing data.
- B. The staging model run will fail.
- C. dbt will issue a warning but continue processing.
- D. Downstream models relying on the staging model will continue to function.

Answer: A,B

Explanation:

A and C are correct. A missing dependency will cause SQL errors, and nulls would likely occur where the dropped table's data was used. B is incorrect. Downstream models will often fail if an upstream model fails. D is incorrect. dbt's strict dependency handling is likely to stop the process and throw errors.

NEW QUESTION # 283

You want to trigger a dbt job immediately upon successful completion of an upstream ETL process. Which methods could achieve this?

- A. Scheduling a dbt job with a very frequent interval (e.g., every 5 minutes) to poll for changes in a metadata table.
- B. Using dbt Cloud's webhooks to create an endpoint that your ETL process can call.
- C. Configuring the ETL process to send a completion notification to your CI/CD tool, triggering the dbt job.
- D. Using the dbt build command to run all dependent models after a successful dbt run.

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

A and B establish event-driven, active triggering. C is a workaround that may be inefficient and introduce a lag. D is for sequential execution, not external event dependency.

NEW QUESTION # 284

You're loading fresh data from an external API. How would you implement dbt tests to ensure this feed is consistently providing up-to-date data?

- A. Write a custom test comparing the API response payload with previously captured data
- B. Create a dbt model that directly queries the API in real-time as part of the dbt test run-
- C. Test the maximum recorded timestamp in your model against the current timestamp, allowing for a small lag
- D. Use a dbt source freshness test to define acceptable thresholds for the staleness of the source.

Answer: B,C

NEW QUESTION # 285

You debug a production issue by running a model in a testing environment with additional logging output. Which dbt features or command-line additions would facilitate this?

- A. dbt hooks to redirect model-related logs to a centralized logging platform.
- B. Environment variables to conditionally enable verbose logging macros inside the model.
- C. The `-warn-error` flag to treat warnings as errors, making your run fail louder on potential issues.
- D. Custom dbt flags (using `-vars`) to control the logging level of the SQL execution.

Answer: B,C,D

Explanation:

These provide control during execution: A changes model behavior. B makes execution more sensitive. C alters dbt's log handling.
