NEW QUESTION # 15

Where does saltatory conduction occur?

- A. Unmyelinated axons
- B. Dendrites
- C. Myelinated axons
- D. Muscle cells

Answer: C

Explanation:

Saltatory conduction is the rapid transmission of nerve impulses along myelinated axons. In myelinated neurons, the axon is covered with a fatty insulating layer called myelin, which is interrupted at gaps known as nodes of Ranvier. During saltatory conduction, the electrical impulse "jumps" from one node to the next, greatly increasing the speed of signal transmission. Unmyelinated axons conduct impulses more slowly because the signal must travel continuously along the entire membrane. Dendrites receive signals rather than transmit them over long distances, and muscle cells do not conduct nerve impulses in this manner. The NEX Science exam commonly tests nervous system physiology, particularly mechanisms that improve conduction speed, making myelinated axons the correct answer.

NEW QUESTION # 18

Which structure works to prevent reflux of gastric contents by contracting and relaxing?

- A. Upper esophageal sphincter
- B. Angle of His
- C. Esophageal muscularis
- D. Lower esophageal sphincter

Answer: D

Explanation:

The lower esophageal sphincter (LES) is a ring of smooth muscle located at the junction between the esophagus and the stomach. Its primary function is to prevent gastric contents, including acid, from flowing back into the esophagus. The LES contracts to keep the stomach contents contained and relaxes to allow food to enter the stomach during swallowing. Dysfunction of the LES can lead to gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). The esophageal muscularis helps move food, the upper esophageal sphincter controls entry into the esophagus, and the angle of His is an anatomical feature rather than a muscular valve. The NEX Science exam frequently tests digestive system physiology and reflux prevention mechanisms.
