AAVSB Veterinary Technician National Exam Sample Questions (Q55-Q60):

NEW QUESTION # 55

You are prepping the surgical suite and patient for an exploratory and presumptive gastrotomy. An 8-MO MI Labrador ate the contents of the bathroom trashcan 60 minutes prior to presentation. The vet induced vomiting with apomorphine, and the dog vomited up most items, but something still remains. Radiographs confirm that whatever remains is still confined to the stomach. In addition to the normal surgical pack, you also should have all of the following present and ready in case the surgeon requires it, except:

- A. Lavage fluid
- B. Army-Navy retractors
- C. Balfour abdominal retractors
- D. Sterile laparotomy sponges

Answer: B

Explanation:

When performing a gastrotomy, you want to ensure your veterinarian has a complete sterile surgical pack appropriate for intestinal surgery. While you hope to only go into the stomach (based on radiographic findings), until the vet runs the intestines, you won't know. Having sufficient instruments at the ready is paramount to minimize anesthesia time and ensure a smooth surgery.

In addition to the routine instrument pack, one should also have:

*Balfour abdominal retractors: Self-retaining retractors are most commonly used in soft tissue surgeries. Because it has a cranial blade, in addition to helping lateralize the body walls, it can also aid in cranial retraction. This helps with the overall visualization of the surgical field.

*Sufficient sterile laparotomy sponges (as well as sterile fluid to keep them wet to protect organs as needed)

*Lavage fluid for flushing the stomach +/- abdomen if peritoneal contamination is suspected

*Suction

Army-Navy (or just called Army) retractors are handheld retractors that are double-ended. The blades are different lengths on either side. Because it lacks teeth, it is atraumatic save for too much pressure if excess force is applied. These are used for the retraction of muscle, skin, or fat. Usually, this type of retractor isn't necessary for a routine gastrotomy. Still, it is something you may need handy for a GDV and gastropexy surgery.

NEW QUESTION # 56

An eight-year-old FS Miniature Schnauzer is being discharged after her recent cystotomy. Which of the following is correct when advising the client about post-operative at-home care?

- A. Recheck the pet if she is straining with normal urine production; she should be evaluated ASAP.
- B. If the patient is sent home with an antibiotic, they should give it until finished - it won't need to be changed.
- C. No changes in bathroom habits are necessary.
- D. The owner should expect bloody urine for 12-36 hours after discharge.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Post-operative hematuria is common after a cystostomy. Warning owners of this ahead of time can provide peace of mind and prevent unneeded phone calls to the office. However, inform the owner that if it lasts longer than 36 hours, the amount of blood is not lessening over time or worsening, or they continue to see blood clots pass, the pet should be re-evaluated.

Some animals are sent home without antibiotics, as antimicrobial stewardship recommends waiting until culture and sensitivity results are in to ensure proper therapy, complete resolution, and minimizing the animal's exposure to antibiotics and the negative effects it can have on the microbiome and risks of antimicrobial resistance development. However, once culture and sensitivity results return, an antibiotic may be prescribed if infection is present, and the owner may need to pick this up.

Dogs post-op should be walked on a leash more frequently than normal. This permits complete emptying of the bladder and allows the owner to monitor urine color or amount and to note any straining. Further, the owner can watch for pain during urination and if there is no urine production. The bladder mustn't get overstretched. If an animal has to hold their urine too long, this could put undue pressure on the bladder while healing.

Not passing any urine despite drinking appropriately and attempting to urinate could signify obstruction either by stones left in (hopefully not the case), blood clots, or another abnormality. This pet should be evaluated immediately.

Some animals may be prescribed a prescription diet, but this is generally held until the stone analysis returns in a few weeks. Normal post-op feeding instructions would be appropriate for this patient.

NEW QUESTION # 57

You are asked to place a catheter for venous access for a patient needing to go on an isotonic fluid. Peripheral veins may be used with fluids of what osmolality?

- A. 840 milliosmoles (mOsm)/L
- B. < 500 and > 300 mOsm/L
- C. 600 milliosmoles (mOsm)/L or less
- D. 900 (mOsm)/L

Answer: C

Explanation:

The normal osmolality of blood tends to be between about 280-310 milliosmoles (mOsm)/L. Isotonic fluids are those with osmolalities equal to that of blood, whereas hypotonic solutions would fall below 280, and hypertonic would be above 310 mOsm/L.

Peripheral catheters are commonly used for fluids less than or equal to 600 mOsm/L. Fluids higher in osmolality can cause damage to the veins (phlebitis).

Total parenteral nutrition carries an osmolality of 840 mOsm/L. 900 (mOsm)/L would be consistent with a 3% hypertonic solution (3% NaCl) vs. the commonly isotonic 0.9% NaCl (normal saline) fluid used peripherally, with an osmolality of only 308. Finally, < 500 and > 300 mOsm/L would not be accurate because that would not include isotonic fluids commonly used, such as NaCl, Plasma-Lyte, Normosol R, or lactated Ringer's (LR).

NEW QUESTION # 58

Ferrets are susceptible to all except which of the following?

- A. Canine distemper
- B. Human influenza
- C. Heartworms
- D. Feline panleukopenia

Answer: D

Explanation:

Ferrets are not susceptible to feline panleukopenia.

Ferrets are susceptible to the following:

*Human influenza: They can both receive the infection from humans and transmit the infection to humans.

*Canine distemper: They should be vaccinated with a killed canine vaccine.

*Heartworms: Preventative medication is recommended. While their infection is closer to that of a dog, their clinical signs more closely resemble those seen in cats.

NEW QUESTION # 59

Laminitis is a disease that primarily occurs in adult horses, though its exact cause is unknown. What part of the horse's body does laminitis directly affect?

- A. Organs
- B. Feet
- C. Bones
- D. Joints

Answer: B

Explanation:

Laminitis, also known as founder, is a disease that directly affects a horse's feet. Laminitis can occur in only the front feet, or in all four feet, and causes the sensitive laminae of the horse's feet to become inflamed. This disease is serious and often life-threatening. Lamina corium is present between the hoof wall and the third phalanx. It provides nutrition to parts of the foot. This is the area that becomes inflamed.

Laminitis is not a disease that directly affects a horse's joints, bones, or organs.
