How many policy layers do Access Control policy support?

- A. 0
- B. 1
- C. 2
- D. 3

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation

The Access Control policy supports two policy layers. These are the Network layer and the Application & URL Filtering layer. The Network layer contains rules that control the network traffic based on the source, destination, service, and action. The Application & URL Filtering layer contains rules that control the application and web access based on the application, site category, and user identity<sup>2</sup>.

The Access Control policy can also use inline layers, which are sub-policies that are embedded within a rule. Inline layers allow more granular control over specific traffic or scenarios, such as VPN, Mobile Access, or different user groups<sup>13</sup>. However, inline layers are not considered as separate policy layers, but rather as extensions of the parent rule<sup>4</sup>.

Therefore, the correct answer is A. The Access Control policy supports two policy layers.
