Which of the following MDM processes needs to take place FIRST?

- A. Consolidation of multiple data fields
- B. Creation of a data dictionary
- C. Compliance with regulations
- D. Standardization of data field names

Answer: B

Explanation:
This is because a data dictionary is a type of document that defines and describes the data elements, attributes, and relationships in a database or a data set. A data dictionary can be used to facilitate the MDM (Master Data Management) process, which is a process that aims to ensure the quality, consistency, and accuracy of the data across different sources and systems. By creating a data dictionary first, the analyst can establish a common understanding and standardization of the data field names, types, formats, and meanings, as well as identify any potential issues or conflicts in the data, such as missing values, duplicate values, or inconsistent values. The other MDM processes can take place after creating a data dictionary. Here is why:
Compliance with regulations is a type of MDM process that ensures that the data meets the legal and ethical requirements and standards of the industry or the organization. Compliance with regulations can take place after creating a data dictionary, because the data dictionary can help the analyst to identify and apply the relevant rules and policies to the data, such as data privacy, security, or retention.
Standardization of data field names is a type of MDM process that ensures that the data field names are consistent and uniform across different sources and systems. Standardization of data field names can take place after creating a data dictionary, because the data dictionary can provide a reference and a guideline for naming and labeling the data fields, as well as resolving any discrepancies or ambiguities in the data field names.
Consolidation of multiple data fields is a type of MDM process that combines or merges the data fields from different sources or systems into a single source or system. Consolidation of multiple data fields can take place after creating a data dictionary because the data dictionary can help the analyst to map and match the data fields from different sources or systems based on their definitions and descriptions, as well as eliminating any redundant or duplicate data fields.

- C. Continuous
- D. Control

NEW QUESTION # 53
A junior web developer is developing a new application where users can upload short videos. The first task is to create a homepage that shows the headline "Upload Your Short Videos" and a clickable button that says
"upload now".
Which of the following HTML commands would help the developer to complete the task successfully?

- A. < span >Upload Your Short Videos< /span >< button >upload now< /button >
- B. < p >Upload Your Short Videos< /p >< p >upload now< /p >
- C. < hl >Upload Your Short Videos< /h1 >< button >upload now< /button >
- D. < hl >Upload Your Short Videos< /h1 >< hl >upload now< /h1 >

Answer: C

Explanation:
Explanation
The HTML commands that would help the developer to complete the task successfully are <h1>Upload Your Short Videos</h1> and <button>upload now</button>. The <h1> tag defines a heading level 1, which is the largest and most important heading on a webpage. The <button> tag defines a clickable button that can perform some action when clicked. The other options are not suitable for the task, as they either use the wrong tags or do not create a clickable button. The  tag defines a section of text with no specific meaning or formatting. The  tag defines a paragraph of text. The <hl> tag does not exist in HTML. Reference: HTML Tags - W3Schools

NEW QUESTION # 55
Given the diagram below:

Which of the following data schemas shown?

- A. Data Lake
- B. Online transactional processing
- C. Key-value pairs
- D. Relational database

Answer: D

Explanation:
A relational database is a type of database that organizes data into tables, where each table has a fixed number of columns and a variable number of rows. Each row in a table represents a record or an entity, and each column represents an attribute or a property of that entity. The tables are linked by common fields, called keys, which enable the database to establish relationships between the data. A relational database schema is a diagram that shows the structure and organization of the tables, columns, keys, and constraints in a relational database. The diagram given in the question is an example of a relational database schema, as it shows two tables: "Runs" and "Experiments", with their respective columns, data types, and primary keys. The "Runs" table also has a foreign key that references the "ExperimentId" column in the "Experiments" table, indicating a relationship between the two tables. Therefore, the correct answer is D.
