Appian Associate Developer Sample Questions (Q85-Q90):

NEW QUESTION # 85

An interface references an expression rule.

What are the relationships between these objects?

- A. Dependents and Precedents
- B. Inheritance and Association
- C. Dependents and Reliants

Answer: A

Explanation:

In Appian, when an interface references an expression rule, the interface is considered a dependent because it depends on the expression rule to function correctly. Conversely, the expression rule is a precedent because the interface relies on it.

NEW QUESTION # 86

According to best practices, what is Appian's recommendation for updating Test environments?

- A. Make the same update manually both in Dev and Test environments.
- B. Make the update directly in the Test environment.
- C. Make the update in the Dev environment, then compare, and deploy the update to the Test environment.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 87

A user wants to view a bulleted list of information on an interface.

Which component should you use?

- A. textField
- B. richTextDisplayField
- C. paragraphField

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 88

You need to remove an unused field from an existing record type Product, which has data sync enabled and is backed by a database table.

What should you do?

- A. Delete the column from the database table and perform a full resync of the record type.
- B. Delete the field from the product Custom Data Type (CDT) and perform a full resync of the record type.
- C. Delete the field from the record type and optionally delete the column from the database table.

Answer: B

Explanation:

In Appian, when dealing with a record type that has data sync enabled and is backed by a database table, changes to the structure of the underlying data model, such as removing a field, should be carefully managed. The correct approach involves deleting the unused field from the Custom Data Type (CDT) that defines the structure of the data for the record type. Following this change, a full resynchronization of the record type is necessary to ensure that the changes in the CDT are reflected in the record type and its associated data in Appian. This process ensures data integrity and consistency across the application and the database.

Appian Documentation on Data Management: Provides guidelines on managing data structures, including CDTs and record types, within Appian applications.

NEW QUESTION # 89

You received a support ticket where the user claims that nothing happens when they click the button to complete a task. You confirm that the user is assigned to the task.

What is a possible reason for this problem?

- A. The button was not configured to submit the form.
- B. The user was not in the user group configured for the process model security.
- C. The process report that drives the runtime database does not have security set properly.

Answer: A

Explanation:

If a user claims that nothing happens when they click a button to complete a task, a possible reason could be that the button was not configured to submit the form. This configuration is essential for triggering the form submission action, which in turn can complete the task or initiate further processes. Without this setup, clicking the button will not result in any action.
