NEW QUESTION # 15

An administrator is troubleshooting an issue with traffic that matches the interzone-default rule, which is set to default configuration. What should the administrator do?

- A. Review the System Log

- B. Refresh the Traffic Log
- C. Change the logging action on the rule
- D. Tune your Traffic Log filter to include the dates

Answer: C

Explanation:

Traffic that does not match any of the rules you defined will match the predefined interzone- default rule at the bottom of the rulebase and be denied. For visibility into the traffic that is not matching any of the rules you created, enable logging on the interzone-default rule.

NEW QUESTION # 16

What Policy Optimizer policy view differ from the Security policy do?

- A. It indicates that a broader rule matching the criteria is configured above a more specific rule.
- B. It shows rules with the same Source Zones and Destination Zones.
- C. It shows rules that are missing Security profile configurations.
- D. It indicates rules with App-ID that are not configured as port-based.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Policy Optimizer policy view differs from the Security policy view in several ways. One of them is that it indicates rules with App-ID that are not configured as port-based. These are rules that have the application set to "any" instead of a specific application or group of applications. These rules are overly permissive and can introduce security gaps, as they allow any application traffic on the specified ports. Policy Optimizer helps you convert these rules to application-based rules that follow the principle of least privilege access<sup>12</sup>. You can use Policy Optimizer to discover and convert port-based rules to application-based rules, and also to remove unused applications, eliminate unused rules, and discover new applications that match your policy criteria<sup>3</sup>.
