□ Box 1: Attended desktop flow

Desktop flows are used to automate tasks on the Web or the desktop.

To run an attended desktop flow, you need to have an active Windows user session that matches the name of the user configured for your connection.

Note: Web applications are critical components of most organizations, and they are commonly used to access data from servers.

Most CRM and ERP platforms run through web browsers, while the most popular business productivity tools are web services.

Web applications are unquestionably an integral part of the technological infrastructure of most companies.

To provide automation solutions for these applications, Power Automate Desktop supports all major browsers through its web automation actions.

Box 2: Unattended desktop flow.

Unattended desktop flows are best for applications that do not need human supervision.

NEW QUESTION # 252

You add an existing outside Dataverse cloud flow to the solution.

- A. Export and import flow as part of an unmanaged solution
- B. Delete the flow connections, and Power Platform substitutes them with connection references
- C. Export and import flow as part of a managed solution
- D. Use Flow checker's option to remove connections and add connection reference
- E. After the first flow run, delete the flow connections and substitute them with connection references

Answer: A,D

Explanation:

You have two options when you add a current Power Automate cloud flow to the solution: add From Dataverse (Number 1) and Outside Dataverse (Number 2).

Outside flows include environment-specific connections. The solution needs to substitute these connections with connection references for outside flows. The solution's connection reference component removes the need for further configuration after the solution is imported to a new environment.

A connection reference is automatically created when you create a new connection for the PowerApps canvas app or Power Automate flow from the solution. Both app and flow will bind to the connection reference.

But when you bring an existing app or flow from outside, the solution does not create a connection reference automatically.

For outside Power Automate cloud flow, you can change connections to connection references in two ways:

- Export and import flow as part of an unmanaged solution. The connections will be replaced with connection references.
- If you open the flow from a solution, a Flow Checker will warn you about using connection references instead of the connections. It will offer to remove connections from the flow and provide a link to add the connection references instead.
