Data protection	Global distribution of objects using either replication or erasure coding
Global namespace	Abstracts storage from the application and provides a common view independent of location.

#Flexible data access method: Object storage can offer multiple ways to access and interact with stored data, such as REST/SOAP APIs (for object-based access) and file-sharing protocols (CIFS, NFS) for file-level access.

#Metadata-driven policy: Object storage uses rich metadata to define how objects are placed, protected, and managed, driven by policies that respond to service-level requirements.

#Data protection: Object storage systems implement data protection at a global scale through replication or erasure coding to ensure data durability and availability.

#Global namespace: Object storage abstracts physical locations, providing a single namespace (a unified view) so that applications can seamlessly access data regardless of where it physically resides.
