- A. Environment and materials
- B. Top management support
- C. Creativity
- D. Multidisciplinary team of people.
- E. Highly iterative process

Answer: A,D,E

Explanation:
Design Thinking requires specific core components to effectively tackle problems in a human-centered and innovative way. Here's why the correct answers are A, D, and E:
* Environment and materials (A):A conducive environment with the right materials (e.g., whiteboards, sticky notes, markers) is essential for fostering creativity and collaboration. SAP emphasizes the importance of creating a space that supports active participation and idea generation.
* Highly iterative process (D):Design Thinking is inherently iterative, involving cycles of divergence and convergence to refine solutions. SAP highlights that iteration allows teams to test assumptions, gather feedback, and improve outcomes continuously.
* Multidisciplinary team of people (E):A diverse team with varied expertise and perspectives ensures comprehensive problem-solving. SAP stresses the value of multidisciplinary collaboration to generate innovative ideas and address complex challenges.
Incorrect Options:
* B. Top management support:While top management support can be beneficial, it is not a core component of the Design Thinking process itself.

- B. Asking people
- C. Studying analyst reports
- D. Trying out the user experience
- E. Observing.

Explanation:
Empathic field research is a cornerstone of the Empathy phase in Design Thinking. It involves gathering qualitative data to deeply understand users' behaviors, emotions, and challenges. Effective techniques include direct engagement with users and immersive observation.
* Option A: Performing market analysisThis is incorrect. Market analysis is a quantitative approach typically used in traditional market research, not empathic field research. Design Thinking focuses on qualitative, human-centered data collection methods.
* Option B: Asking peopleThis is correct. Conducting interviews and asking open-ended questions allows researchers to gain insights into users' thoughts, feelings, and motivations. This is a key technique in empathic research.
* Option C: Trying out the user experienceThis is correct. Immersing oneself in the user's environment or trying out their tasks firsthand provides valuable experiential insights. This technique helps researchers understand the context and challenges users face.
* Option D: Observing.This is correct. Observing users in their natural environment reveals behaviors and pain points that users may not explicitly articulate. Observation is a fundamental technique in empathic research.
* Option E: Studying analyst reportsThis is incorrect. Analyst reports provide secondary data and are not part of empathic field research. Design Thinking relies on primary data collected directly from users.
